CLOSE CONTESTS IN BETHEL ELECTIONS

Bisbee New Selectman Russell On School Committee All Money Voted as Recommended

Perhaps the good weather and maybe the interest in town affairs brought out the crowd on Monday morning, but anyway all sections of the town were well represented and showed a lively interest in the selection of the town's administrators.

No contests appeared in the offices of moderator, clerk, treasurer and auditor, and one ballot cast in each case re-elected the former incumbents. As suggested in last week's Citizen close contests developed in the other places, but in only one instance was it necessary to try more than once to make a decision.

Although some scattering votes were cast, John Howe and Ernest Bisbee were the main candidates for first selectman, Bisbee winning 161 of the 306 votes. Howe and Carroll Abbott tried for second and Abbott received 135 out of 204. The real contest developed in picking out the third man. The first time 255 voted. Clarence Bennett had 108, Howe 78, and Gordon E. Lathrop, 67. On the second attempt Howe stepped up to take 137 out of 276 votes cast, while Bennett received 90 and Lathrop 48. Then on motion of Mr. Lathrop the clerk cast one ballot and elected Mr. Howe.

The contest for the school committee was between Lloyd Luxton and F. E. Russell, Mr. Russell having 140 of the 251 votes cast. Bids for collecting taxes were made by W. E. Bartlett at one cent on the dollar and E. E. Bennett at eight mills. The rate was fixed at .008 and Mr. Bartlett elected with 237 of the 303 votes. Another three cornered rivalry featured the road commissioner's election. Bert Brown, who has held the job for several years, won against Howard Bailey and Philip Brown, having 183 of the 346 votes. The pay of the road commissioner was fixed at $4.00 a day and that of the selectmen at $3.50.

SUPPER—FUN—MUSIC

An air of mystery shrouds the entertainment advertised to follow the Congregational Men's Supper next Wednesday evening. Rumor has it that the committee is in negotiation with talent from outside Bethel to provide fun and music, but they cannot be led to divulge the program. It will be just as good as the supper and that is 'nuff said. The tickets are out; the cooks are restocking their larders; and the rest of us are saving up our appetites. Remember, next Wednesday, the 13th, and just 40 cents!

NOTICE

I am not a candidate for re-election as Assessor of the Village Corporation.

If Mothers Only Knew

Thousands of Children Suffer from Worms, and Their Mothers do not know what the trouble is.

Signs of Worms are: Constipation, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full stomach with pains, pale face, eyes heavy, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, etc.

Mrs. E. W. Stephan, 31 Kenberma Road, Dorchester, Mass., wrote: "My little girl's freedom from children's diseases, colds, constipation, etc., I attribute in a large measure to the use of Dr. True's Elixir."

Dr. True's Elixir

A pure herb medicine, not a harsh stimulator: natural relief from constipation.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

Sunday afternoon, March 3—It has been a cold, raw day with snow falling continually since early morning. Night is coming on and the thermometer registers only 20 above zero.

Monday morning, March 4—What a contrast to March 3—The sun shines out of a cloudless sky. No traces of the uncomfortable day of yesterday. It looks so pleasant outside. 30 above at 10 a. m.

Today is Town Meeting day. To boost or be boosted seems the question; but whatever the outcome it will be for the best, when the cloud has rolled away.

Ted Chase, Nelson Perham and Guyson Davis were canvassing this part of the town recently in the interest of their respective candidates for Town Meeting.

Gerald Benson of Benson Brothers has a large number of friends who have prevailed upon him to accept the nomination as Road Commissioner for South Woodstock.

Mrs. Annie Davis is very ill at this writing from the effects of a nervous breakdown following an operation to which she submitted about ten days ago.

Mrs. Alura Andrews and little son, James Harland, returned to their home here Sunday morning, March 3 from Mrs. Emery's Maternity Home in West Paris, where she was most tenderly cared for during the past two weeks.

Stanley Andrews has finished his course of study in embalming at Boston and returned to his home here where he will continue in the employ of the I. W. Andrews C., casket manufacturers and undertakers.

Linwood Andrews, who has been working at home during his brother Stanley's absence in Boston, left March 4 for Auburn where he will again take up his school work at the Maine School of Commerce one year of which he has previously completed.

"Bung" Gammon of Sumner was in town recently making a house to house canvass for the Agricultural census. Mr. Gammon received the appointment for the towns of Sumner and Woodstock.

Mrs. Rose Cole will assist in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Andrews during the remainder of the winter and spring.

Andrew Rose has again been quite poorly, suffering from a hard cold, but thanks to his many kind neighbors and friends he is now much better.

No school today, as our teachers are a wide-awake crowd and much interested in town, county and state affairs.

We again hear that Lester Felt is meeting with his previous high marks at the University of Maine at Orono besides earning many a good penny to help defray his school expenses.

Mrs. Alice Ring of Paris is assisting with the care of the three small children of Mrs. Alice Felt Roberts of Bird Hill.

Gayden Davis was in Waterford recently looking after a lumbering job for another party who owns the timber but lives in Woodstock.

What might have been a terrible accident occured recently here at at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gayden Davis. The victim was little Ethel Mary, 15 months old daughter, who, during the absence of her mother in replenishing the stove with wood, took this opportunity to investigate the mysteries of their electric washing machine and wringer. In just a moment of time little Ethel had caught her hand in the wringer and before being extricated her poor little arm was drawn in for nearly three-quarters of its entire length. Dr. Kay was called and pronounced no bones broken but muscles very badly injured. At the present time the arm is badly discolored and the water from the elbow joint is much in evidence. Had it been in the wringer a few moments longer no power on earth could have saved the child from having its arm torn from its little defenceless body.

Mr. and Mrs. Correy Bonney of West Sumner have been the guests of A. M. Andrews during the past week.

The patrons on R. F. D. 1, South Woodstock, send cordial greetings to our new Postmaster, Henry Stone, of Stearns Hill, Paris.

Under the paragraph regarding "any other business" Gordon E. Lathrop introduced the following article for the consideration of the voters: To see if the Town will vote to appoint a committee to consider some form of Australian ballot for the annual town meeting; said committee to consist of the three selectmen and six persons to be appointed by the moderator; the committee to incorporate their recommendations in an article in a warrant for the next town meeting, either special or annual, as per chapter 5 sections 38 to 52 inclusive of the Revised Statutes of 1930. The idea didn't seem to appeal to some of those present and Frank Brown made the motion to pass over the matter. Mr. Lathrop explained that the proposition involved no outlay of the town's money and that the innovation was proposed in a regular manner. The motion met the approval of Paul Marston, who said that this method is used with success in other towns, and he moved that unanimous consent be given for the passage of the article which was done. The moderator appointed the following to serve on the committee: Ernest F. Bisbee, Carroll Abbott, John H. Howe, Paul C. Marston, E. C. Park, Leslie E. Mills, George N. Thompson, Gordon E. Lathrop, J. P. Butts.

Wrestling manfully with a stack of bills that, if laid end to end, would reach several kilometers, the 87th Legislature is about ready to rule yes or no on much of this legislation which is of more than ordinary interest.

One of the bills to be disposed of will be that which proposes to increase the resident hunting and fishing licenses to the extent of fifty cents each.

This bill got away to a start that was not altogether auspicious. At the meeting before the Fish and Game Committee during which citizens from all parts of the State expressed their views, sentiment seemed to be split almost exactly down the middle.

Since then, however, there has been a perceptible swing in favor of the measure. Just how far this swing will go is, of course, a matter of conjecture. Proponents seem to think that it will go far enough to put it over the top.

The reasons for this apparent change of sentiment are several and will bear enumerating.

In the first place, many objected to the measure on the grounds that it would impose a hardship on many who are in anything but affluent circumstances. They said it would close the woods and waters of the State to these people who, as residents should be free to enjoy its pleasures.

The proponents of the bill say that the exact opposite is the case that the exact opposite is the case; that if increase is not granted that fishing will decline in the State to such an extent that the amount now spent for a resident license will be money spent for next to nothing. Therefore, they affirm, if the increased license fee which only amounts to one cent a week will enable the Fish and Game Commission to stock the waters of the State so that the average man would get something more to show for his fishing trips than mosquito bites, why wouldn't it be cheaper for everybody in the end?

All right, say the opponents, but how do we know that the increase will result in better fishing? Those in favor of the bill have an answer for that, too.

They say that one of the reasons that fishing will never be any better under the present circumstances is that the Fish and Game Department is forced by lack of money to plant fish that are too young to take care of themselves, with the result that the mortality rate is very high, and that if they could be kept a while longer until they are old enough to outswim their enemies that they would live to chase the lures of the fishermen.

Continuing, they add that under normal circumstances that it would cost untold thousands of dollars to build the rearing pools necessary for this work, but that fortunately, at the present time, the United States Government will do this work as a relief measure, thereby giving us a set-up that will be far and away the best in world. All we must do is to guarantee the operation of this huge system. The increased fee will enable us to do all this.

A few opponents of this bill say that the out-of-State people who fish and hunt here should be forced to pay any additional sum that is needed by the Commission. Proponents say that our visitors are already paying more than a just share and quote the following from the 1934 statistics. The total number of non-residents who fished or hunted here was 30,001. They paid in license fees $109,114.00. In the same year, 158,889 residents contributed only $91,303.90 in license fees. In other words, the non-residents who comprised only 15% of those hunting and fishing here paid 56% of the license bill.

Further, say the opponents, if the license bill is not passed, we are apt to kill a goose that lays those very large golden eggs in the form of revenue from non-residents who spend thousands of dollars in Maine each year and who will seek other vacation grounds if our hunting and fishing continues to decline.

Romey Smith and Frank Osgood, "Bucksaw Artists," are giving daily exhibitions of their skill with this weapon on a pile of spruce at the foot of Mt. Waterspout. These performances are sponsored by Ernest Buck, well-known local lumber man. The proceeds will be used for the support of needy children. In an interview granted the writer, the senior member of the team, the genial Romey, on being asked to what he attributed his phenominal success in his chosen profession, replied that he laid it to the ease with which his constitution assimulates chewing tobacco. Walter Ballantine, foreman of the chopping crew, is hardly able to supply a sufficient amount of spruce.

Hat-Bands and Baldness

Baldness, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times, is not due to parasites, dandruff, nervousness or brain-work, but to the pressure of hat-bands upon the blood vessels in the scalp. Heretofore, women wore loosely fitting hats, and escaped baldness. Narrow-headed men do not feel the pressure of hat-bands as much as do the fullheaded, and narrow heads are seldom bald. According to the United States Department of Public Health, it is impossible to restore hair which has vanished. Baldness cannot be cured, but may be prevented.

When You Need a Friend

by Lawrence Hawthorne

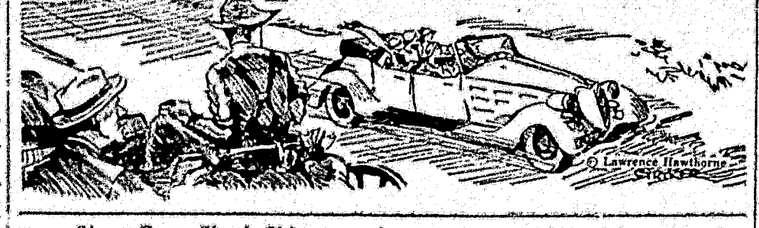

When days 're dark an' the clouds hang low,
An' the road is rough an' long;
When problems face you on every hand,
An' your plans have all gone wrong;
When troubles come, an' your luck looks bad,
An' you don't know what t' do—
Oh, then it is that you understand
What a true friend means t' you!

When times 're good, an' you're feelin' fine,
An' the sun is shinin' bright;
When every day brings you some new joy,
An' the world is quite all right,
You're glad t' know that your friends 're near
An' will join you in your fun—
But you never learn what a true friend is,
Till your troubles have begun!

A lot o' folks treat you mighty well
While you have the cash t' spend,
But pass you by with a careless nod
When you really need a friend;
They fail you then, as they always will
In the time o' deep distress,
An' turn t' one who can do no harm
To their pride an' selfishness.

I've had my share o' the ups-an'-downs
That we all must meet in life,
But every time I have suffered loss
Or encountered care an' strife,
Some friend has come with a cheerin' smile
An' has helped me see it through—
Has brought relief in the time o' need.
As our true friends always do.

Shoes From Shark Skins

There are 500 kinds of sharks in the world, but the skin from only three species are used principally, to provide leather for making shoes. These are the Arctic, the tropical and the silk shark, the latter being caught off the Portuguese coast. Shoes made from the Arctic shark have a woolly appearance, and are useful on the golf course. Women's shoes are made from the silk shark, and one of its most popular uses is for handbags. Sharks are caught in large fish-nets about 200 yards long, and six yards deep.

Bones May Verify Legend

Unearthing of 12 skeletons of unusually tall men at the spot of Roncevales, France, where legend says Roland and his fearless knights made their last stand against the Moors in 778, may substantiate the story. Historians declare the find proves that the traditional French hero really made his gallant fight. The discoveries were made during preparation for the erection of a monument on the summit of Ibaneta in the Pyrenees.

The Orb-Weavers

Some of the Orb-Weavers of the spider family live in their webs, hanging head downward, usually near the center of the net; others have a retreat near the edge of the net, where they hang with their backs downwards. While resting in these webs they keep hold of some of the lines leading from the net, so that they can instantly detect the presence of an enemy. The Orb Weavers are usually plump spiders, with a large abdomen, and often nearly spherical. In some species of this family the male is much smaller than the female.

Fishermen Must Pay Toll

The only country in the world which allows individuals to collect a private toll from deep-sea fishermen is Denmark. For many centuries it has held steadfast to a law which gives the owner of shore land the right to "rent the sea" in front of his property for eel fishing. In some years this total rent has amounted to as much as $250,000.—Freling Foster, in Collier's Weekly.

Artificial Throat to Save Baby

Dr. P. Insley of Baltimore is shown with little Miss X, three-day-old baby, who was born without a throat. X-ray pictures disclosed an abbreviated esophagus, which instead of leading into the stomach only led as far as the collar bone. Undaunted, Doctor Insley, and his assistant, Doctor Bay, inserted a rubber tube down the child's throat through which she is now being fed, while they seek to extend the esophagus by the grafting of living tissue.

NEWS-WEEK is a weekly newspaper published in the form of a magazine; a news-magazine.
It operates like a great daily newspaper; it is served by more than five thousand correspondents in the strategic news-centers of the world; its teletypes are fed twenty hours a day by radio, by cable, by wire.
Yet it functions in a way difficult in the daily presentation of news; it incorporates in its treatment of events a background of fact possible only through remarkable research on innumerable fronts; the pictorial fact completes its presentation.
Daily newspapers keep newsreaders abreast of the events of the moment; that is the peculiar duty of the newspaper.
Busy news readers read NEWS-WEEK to gain a brief, compact understanding of all the week's news they need to know

AT HOME

WASHINGTON: Political observers are busily putting two and two together on the threshold of President Roosevelt's third year in office. In spite of the sweeping victory for the New Deal in the gold decisions of the Supreme Court, politicians profess to see less easy sledding ahead. Some Administration measures, notably the social security project and relief moves, have met unexpected opposition in Congress. Other bills sponsored by the White House met with unlooked-for amendment.

In the meantime, Ex-President Hoover stops off long enough on his way back home from his first meeting as a director of the New York Life Insurance Company to put a lengthy statement on the wires addressed to the leading press associations and calling for economies in government, less supervision over business. The well-informed believe it to be a frank bid for a return to public life.

The President, it is freely dumored, will go direct to the public over the radio within a fortnight unless Congressional opposition subsides. Mr. Roosevelt has not been on the air since last September.

FOR SALE: Financial as well as social New York rubbed its eyes at the announcement that two large tracts comprised in the Long Island estate of J. Pierpont Morgan were definitely on the market for disposal. Real estate experts predicted a possible price of $15,000 per acre for the fifty acres involved.

A few weeks ago, Mr. Morgan sold off six of his great masterpieces of art for $1,500,000. The Morgan offices indignantly denied that these moves indicated a possibilities of Mr. Morgan's taking up his residence in England, where he maintains baronial estates. It was explained that he desired "to get his estate in more manageable shape." Old timers recalled the problem of meeting in cash the inheritance taxes when the elder "J. P." died, leaving an enormous sum tied up in almost priceless art treasures.

SURGERY: In Cleveland's vast $15,000,000 medical center a 49-year-old farmer listened to his death warrant. Surgeons gave him only a matter of days following his latest attack of angina pectoris, which kills 17,000 sufferers annually in this country. Dr. Claude S. Beck explained one operation that he had performed successfully on 200 dogs; no human being had ever been subjected to the one operation that might supply blood to the heart when cut off by the constriction of the angina. The farmer was willing; it was his only chance.

Dr. Beck performed the delicate miracle. The patient survived the operation, and must now wait months, perhaps years, to know whether or not he has won his fight. If so, it will be one of surgery's greatest triumphs.

OVERCOME: A fortnight ago, a Wall Street sandwich man, advertising a photo shop at 50 cents a day, found an envelope filled with negotiable securities worth $45,000 half buried in a snow drift. The old man turned his find in to the police, received $20 a week for the remainder of the winter from the surety company and a $75-a-month job from the brokerage house that lost the bonds. Last weekend, rich food, new clothes, sudden comfort drove him temporarily insane. Declaring that he was God, and could kill with a glance, he glared at a fellow-boarder who promptly dropped dead—but from heart disease. Alienists have the fortunate-unfortunate under observation at New York's huge Bellevue Hospital.

GOLD: Financial centres throughout the country took the now famous gold decision with varying reactions. Nobody except the losers of the suits against the government thought that they were any worse off. Stocks boomed for a day or so, then settled down to await developments. No general disturbance was discernable; the air seemed cleared. The elders in Wall Street chuckled over a magazine article written nearly thirty years ago by the late Frank A. Munsey for his "Munsey's Magazine," entitled "There Isn't Enough Gold in the World to Do the World's Work." He predicted far back that new sources of gold would have to be developed, or a new value for gold established. Economists think that the rich publisher was a generation ahead of his time.

OVERSEAS

BROKE: In a Court of Chancery in London, dapper "Jimmy" Walker, most famous playboy mayor in New York's history, admitted that he was broke, that he couldn't pay judgements obtained against him by American creditors, that when he went on trips his actress-wife Betty Compton paid the bills, suggested that he might take up the matter when he returned to America later in the year. Mr. Walker has never returned to his native heath since the day he left it about three years ago, following a scorching investigation at the hands of Judge Samual Seabury. He was the highest paid mayor in New York's history.

RETREAT: Of all the colorful characters that emerged from the Great War none touched the popular magination like "Lawrence of Arabia," the Englishman who penetrated further into the lives, customs and secrets of the Arabian desert than any other white man living or dead. To escape the glamor of his achievements, he became "Aircraftsman Shaw," and took delight in menial jobs around flying fields. Now he is going to do more than retire; he is determined to retreat—to "two rooms, no bed, no kitchen, no drains, but a spring in the garden and a feeling of utter peace. In such rural English atmosphere he will read and write, his two ruling passions.

PERKINS VALLEY, WOODSTOCK

Alta Hendrickson is recovering nicely from her recent operation. Last Monday she rode out a short distance in her pony sleigh. She was the recipient of several nice presents, a Valentine shower, and over 50 pretty Valentines, a large sunshine box filled with pretty gifts, several bouquets of cut flowers, a pretty quilt made by her schoolmates of the Union School, it was supervised by her grandmother, Mrs. Fred Hendrickson, and several other nice presents.

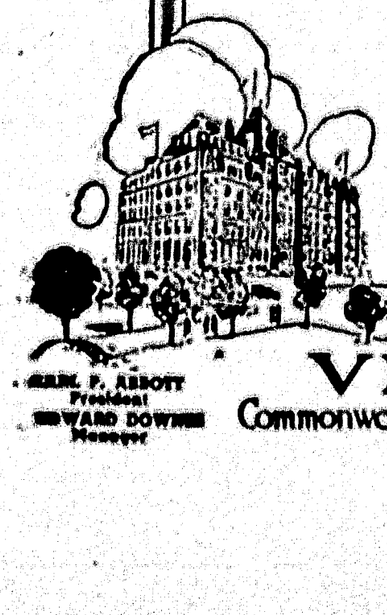

Helen Poland returned home from South Paris last week, where she has been nursing.

Several from here went to Andover Saturday to visit Mrs. Frank Perkins, who has been poorly this winter.

GOULD ACADEMY NOTES

"B" Squad 28—Andover High 10

Showing their best form of the season, the "B" team had little diffculty in lacing Andover High Friday night. Reversing the form which they showed against Gorham the previous week, the Gould boys stepped out right after the opening whistle and the outcome was never in doubt.

Andover seemed to be somewhat hampered by the strict officiating and failed to offer much opposition.

For the "B" Squad, Littlehale, with his clever faking and passing, was the outstanding player. He was ably assisted however by Moore and Robertson.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Theodore Gatlin decides to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles, but all his love for their foster daughter could not shelter her child from the hatred of his mother who had never wanted her. After affairs ended in the divorce court ten-year-old Penelope was placed into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin except for two Sunday afternoons a month. On their first day together they set out joyfully to see a ball game. A ball, hit into the stands, struck Penelope on the head and the neurotic Mrs. Gatlin removed her from the hospital in which her former husband had died her. Mrs. Gatlin spirited the child to Europe. Gatlin retired from business, willed Penelope all his money, and was about to begin search for his daughter when a motor accident ended his life.

CHAPTER II.—Some ten years later in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, a young psychiatrist, was visited by Dan McNamara, chief matron, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl whose terrible childhood had left her with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara and Burt think she was a responsible child and obtained Burt's ex-wife's testimony in court. Even Lance, the doctor's faithful office nurse, was won over to her cause by Nance's hard-boiled exterior.

the girl declared, with an nonchalance, "this is a eak for old lady Belden, She smiled upon him pa-tronizingly. "You're a good scout, Steve. Thanks a lot for all you've done and tried to do. You meant well, but at that I think the old scientific hooey has got you a bit cuckoo, too. I stood for it a while because I thought his nibs might fall for it, but when I saw you weren't going to get to first base with the big boob, I called it no contest." She thrust out her little hand. "Well, good-by, Steve. I suppose I'm keeping you from other nuts."

She came close to him and looked up at him wistfully; so he stooped and kissed her. At once tears suffused her eyes. "You don't mind what I look like, do you, Doctor Burt? You're kind enough not to feel sorry for me."

Amazingly she had changed—slipped out of one personality into the other as one slips out of a coat. "Will you do something for me, Doctor?" she continued, and he saw that she was all nerves now. "I'm looking for a girl named Penelope. I can't remember her last name, but I do wish you'd try to find her for me, even with so little to go on."

"Where does she live, Nance?"

"Out there, somewhere."

"You've been reading a poem, I think, Nance—a poem that runs:

And you, my sweet Penelope, out there somewhere you wait for me,
With buds of roses in your hair and kisses on your mouth.

She trembled with eagerness. "Why, you know her, Doctor. That's the Penelope I'm looking for."

"Oh, if that's the Penelope, why of course I'll find her for you. Good-by, my poor dear girl, and remember to look for me at the gate the day you're released from San Quentin."

A deputy sheriff took Nance Belden to San Quentin and was decent enough to refrain from handcuffing her en route. The girl was not particularly sad. Even the first glimpse of the penitentiary did not disturb her, for the road that enters the grounds is flanked by the homes of the officials and guards, and well-kept lawns and flower gardens give no hint of the gloom that lies in waiting beyond the main gate.

The building in which female convicts are housed at San Quentin would readily be mistaken for a hospital were it not for the bars at the windows and the high metal mesh fence that surrounds the grounds. Two young women were hoeing in the flower beds; along the cement walks other women strolled, singly or in pairs, chatting and enjoying the sunshine and fresh salt breeze that blew in from the bay, less than fifty yards off the beach some men in skiffs were fishing for striped bass, and with the exception of a guard in a kiosk at the entrance to the grounds, one would have to search in vain for the slightest hint of official surveillance.

"So this is San Quentin," Nance remarked gaily to her escort. "Not so bad, my boy, not so bad."

The guard did not answer. He knew that the realization of restriction rather than high walls constitutes the horror of prison life. He took her into a small lobby, where a pleasant-faced middle-aged matron greeted the girl cordially.

"Come with me, Nance," she said, and led the girl into her office, where she took charge of Nance's suitcase, opened it and searched it thoroughly.

"You have nice clothes and toilet articles," she commented. "Have you more clothes at home? These will scarcely last two years."

"Yes. May I send for them?" asked Nance eagerly.

"Of course you may. The women inmates of San Quentin are not required to wear a prison uniform, although we furnish one, if necessary."

"Hurrah for our side," Nance replied cheerfully.

"You read and write, of course, Nance?"

"Do I look like a dumb-bell?"

"Well,"—patiently—"here are the prison rules. Read them, and then obey them strictly. Failure to obey them will lead to disciplinary measures, and repeated infractions may lead to solitary confinement. If you prove to be a good girl you'll receive credit for good behavior in the shape of a reduction in the length of your sentence. Good conduct will also render you eligible for parole after you have served half of your sentence; if you should get into trouble, tell me about it first. I try to give my girls a square deal, but very few of them try to give me one. If you should think you're not being treated fairly, I'll always be glad to discuss your grievances with you. You will meet some terrible women here and you will also meet some who, had they been spared the unfortunate circumstances which conduced to bring them here, would be ladies. Conviction doesn't mean that a person is devoid of all human attributes. You will keep your person and your cell clean, and you will not be locked in your cell unless you misbehave. Your cell—it is really a nice little room—will be sacred to you alone, and you will have the freedom of the building and the grounds. I will assign you to a cell and show you up to it. Then you can change your clothes and come down and join the women in the recreation room yonder."

"You'll do," Nance declared, and held out her hand. Her cell proved to be exactly what the matron had said it was. Nance surveyed it with satisfaction. "This will do me nicely," she said. "Thank you ever so much, Matron."

She unpacked her suitcase, stowed her few belongings in the chest of drawers, removed her hat and sat down on the bed to read the printed list of prison rules. But one of the rules interested her. She discovered she could write a letter once a month and receive visitors once a month—if she behaved herself. "I must be mother's little lamb," she declared. "This is some joint to get out of, but where there's a will there's a way." And she set herself resolutely to discovering the way.

Before locking-up time she thought she had discovered it. It was the fishermen in the cove just off San Quentin point who suggested it to her. In her stroll around the ground she inspected the fence. It was sixteen feet high, of quarter-inch steel mesh, set on steel posts bedded in concrete, and it ran along a concrete base. A barefooted woman, using her toes to climb the mesh, could climb the fence readily enough, were it not for an eighteen-inch topping of barbed wire, strung in strands four inches apart and set inward at an angle of forty-five degrees. One could not possibly surmount that. Nor could one burrow under the concrete base in daylight, even were the means available, nor could one do it at night, because then one was locked in the cell. But one could stroll down the main walk to the sentry box just outside the entrance and appraise the situation there. As Nance suspected, the gate was kept locked and the guard had the key; indeed, the gate was never opened except to admit a new prisoner or an official, or to provide an exit for a discharged prisoner or official. However, Nance did not despair, for the gate was narrow—two feet—and there was no topping on it. She decided she would climb over it some day when the guard's back was turned; ergo, the thing to do was to induce the guard to turn his back!

For a month Nance gave her thoughts over entirely to this problem.

Lanny came into Doctor Burt's office and laid a letter on his desk. It was dated from San Quentin, on the cheap prison stationery, and read:

"Dear Miss Lanning:

"I can receive visitors next Sunday. Won't you please come over and visit me? I'm so lonely, and you were so kind to me when I visited Doctor Burt's office. I have never forgotten you, and never shall.

Sincerely:

"Nance Belden,
"No. 43,231."

"Just think, Stevie," Lanny declared proudly. "She hasn't forgotten me, the poor dear."

"I suppose you'll go over."

"Indeed I shall. It would be terrible if I didn't. You'll send her something, won't you, Stevie? I think that might please her. I think she'd appreciate a portable phonograph and a couple of dozen records. I understand model prisoners are permitted such luxuries."

Stephen smiled. "Well, I'll stand for that expense, too, Lanny. And I shall await with interest the report you will have to make on your return." Lanny beamed.

The following Sunday afternoon, therefore, the matron admitted Lanny to the visitors' room and sent for Nance, who arrived on the run and cast herself joyously into Lanny's arms. Then Nance led the latter into a corner, and speaking swiftly and in a low voice, said:

"We aren't permitted to be alone with our visitors, Lanny. You'll notice the matron remains in the room. She won't listen to what we have to say but she keeps her eyes on us. Will you smuggle a letter out for me? I've got one all written, but the matron reads all our letters before posting them—and I can't have her read this one. It's to a very dear friend and I just couldn't bear to have her read it. Besides, if she read it, she wouldn't mail it."

Lanny's face grew grave. "Do you realize, my dear, what you are asking me to do?"

"Certainly, I wouldn't ask anybody but you to do it, Lanny dear. You're so understanding. If you can smuggle the letter out for me it will mean that within a month I'll be out, too. I'm sorry I cannot give you all my confidence, Lanny, but I just can't. You're the only woman on earth I'd trust, the only woman who has ever been kind to me. And oh, Lanny, dear, I do appreciate your friendship so."

Lanny comforted the girl and considered her request. Considered it sympathetically, too, for at heart she was an outlaw herself. She knew Nance Belden did not belong here; that if the girl had had a fair chance, if she had not been the victim of a code of justice born of ignorance and lack of sympathy, she would be in a sanitarium instead.

"You can read the letter when you get home, Lanny," Nance pleaded, "and if you do not approve of it, you need not mail it. That's fair, isn't it?"

Lanny fell into the trap. "Yes, that's fair," she agreed, for she had unbounded confidence in her own judgment of what was right and what was wrong.

"You old sweetheart," Nance breathed, and kissed her—and at that moment a tall, handsome brunette who had repaid her lover's faithlessness by killing him, and who had been standing around in the hall near the entrance to the visitors' room, moved off down the corridor toward the recreation room. At once a shrill scream penetrated the visitors' room; then another and another—a woman cursed—and cried: "Stop them or they'll hurt each other."

The matron immediately left the visitors' room to quell the disturbance. Instantly Nance Belden drew a thick envelope from her bosom, unlocked Lanny's hand-bag and thrust the envelope in. She beamed proudly upon Lanny.

"I staged that 'ruckus,'" she confessed. "We have to play the game with each other here, you know—and two lifers obliged me. Good behavior doesn't mean time off for them, you know—and a hair-pulling match isn't taken too seriously here. Oh, by the way, what's your address—I mean your home address and telephone number?"

"It's in the telephone book," Lanny replied, and wondered why Nance had requested the information.

"Kiss me again, you dear thing," Nance commanded. Then she was out of the visitors' room, running for the scene of the excitement in the recreation room. She met the matron hurrying back to the visitors' room, after having quelled the fight by her mere appearance.

"You left me alone," Nance explained, "and that's against the rules. So I followed. I didn't want you to think I'd take advantage of you."

The matron smiled and pinched the girl's cheek. "You funny girl," she said. "You don't belong here and it's a shame you have to be here. You have a fine code of honor, Nance, even if they hung it on you for shoplifting."

She nodded to Lanny as the latter passed out of the building. The guard at the entrance took up her pass, looked her over with a pretense of suspicion, opened the gate and let her through. She climbed into her little car and had just started it when a good-looking but somewhat flashy young woman came to the side of the car and said:

"Are you driving to Greenbrae, madam?"

Lanny nodded. "I wonder if you'd give me a lift that far. The bus doesn't leave for an hour and I—"

"By all means," the generous Lanny agreed, and opened the door. The girl thanked her smilingly and climbed in. Half way down to Greenbrae, her guest said: "I think one of your rear tires is flat, madam."

"I was beginning to think so, too. It's bumpy, isn't it? Oh, dear, I loathe changing a tire."

Lanny pulled up to the side of the road and got out, leaving her hand-bag beside her on the seat. Instantly her guest opened it, abstracted the letter Nance had given her and tucked it in her own hand-bag; then got out and with Lanny surveyed the flat tire.

"I'll help," she promised eagerly. "The least I can do to repay your hospitality."

Between them they shifted the wheels and resumed the journey. At Greenbrae the girl got out and thanked Lanny. No sooner had her little car disappeared behind a curve than the girl waved to a sedan parked in back of the little station and climbed in beside a young man who sat behind the wheel.

"Well?" he queried, apparently without interest.

"It worked," she replied. "Let's go."

Inhabitants of Pitcairn Island

Pitcairn Island is a solitary island in the Pacific ocean, between Australia and South America, in 25 degrees 3 minutes south latitude and 130 degrees 8 minutes west longitude. It is about 2 miles long and one mile broad. It was discovered by Carteret in 1767. In 1790 it was taken possession of by nine of the mutineers of H. M. S. Bounty with six Tahitian men and a dozen women, the ringleader being called Christian. Of nine British sailors, only one, Adams, was left in 1800, and from him the present inhabitants are descended. The island was annexed to Britain in 1839. Nearly 200 of the islanders were transferred to Norfolk Island in 1856, but a number of them afterward returned.

"Pillory" in a Church

Failure to attend church was punishable in England by imprisonment at one time, and at the church of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, there is evidence that people who attended had to behave themselves. In the gallery is a finger "pillory." Here naughty boys and girls, as well as those who attempted to leave before the sermon, were detained until the end of the service.

Oratorio and Opera Both Were Started in Italy

An oratorio is a sacred story set to music which, like opera, requires soloists, chorus and full orchestra for its performance, but dispenses with the theatrical adjuncts of scenery, costumes and acting. The modern oratorio and opera both were originated in Italy, about 1600, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer, and were originally indistinguishable from each other, except that one was sacred and the other secular in subject. However, before 1700, particularly in Germany, the oratorio began to be clearly different from the opera, in the relinquishment of dramatic action and accessories, and came to belong esentially to the class of concert music, with more or less of the qualities of church music. The true oratorio style has been developed more remarkably in Germany and England rather than France or Italy.

The first and most universal subject for oratorios was the Passion and the greatest music is that of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," written for service on Good Friday, 1729. In England the works of Handel treated epics as subjects for oratorios.

MOST ECONOMICAL FORD EVER BUILT—The V-8 engine, approved by over a million motorists, provides the power and smoothness of eight cylinder performance with the economy of a "four."

GREATER COMFORT—All passengers now ride between the axles—in the "Comfort Zone." New ease of operation increases the pleasure of your ride.

GREATER ROOMINESS—Front seats are now up to 5½ inches wider, with more leg room, too. The Fordor Sedan seats six in comfort, with handy room for luggage behind rear seat.

GREATER SAFETY—The Ford V-8 body is all steel reinforced with steel. Brakes and clutch are now stronger, safer. A low center of gravity gives greater stability, especially on curves. Safety glass all around at no extra cost.

With the price so low, with assured low cost of operation, and all these 1935 improvements, the new Ford V-8 represents unusual value. See it today!
